- Choosing the right memorial for yourself or a loved one can be challenging.

- There are some questions to ask yourself when you are making this decision that will help narrow down your available choices.

Who is the memorial for?

- Grave sites are frequently used as places to grieve for your loved one, and the place where friends and family will come to visit you.

- Accordingly, the memorial should provide comfort and peace for every person who visits.

Is it for a family or one person?

- Many people find comfort in the thought that they will be buried, and therefore reunited after death, with their family.

- However, if there is no room for additional family members, this is not possible.

What will the memorial look like?

- There are many options to choose from, so speaking with a professional is the best way to proceed.

Where do you want the memorial to be located?

- If you have lived in different places in your lifetime, or your families and friends currently live in different parts of the country, you may decide to be buried where your ancestors were buried.

What do you want your memorial to say?

- If you choose to customize the text on your memorial marker, decide on what you would like to engrave.

- It may be a quote from a favorite poem, a line from your favorite book or simply your nickname for the person who has died.
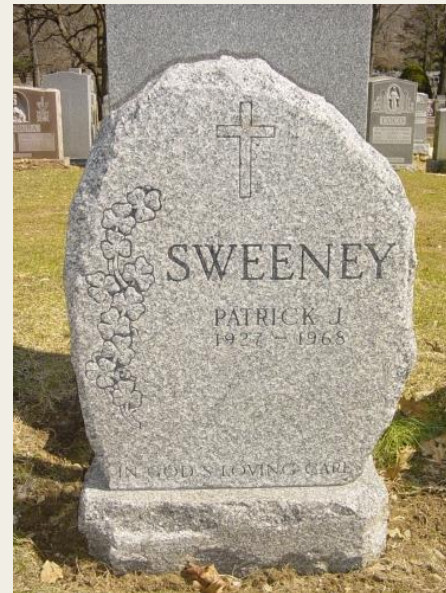

What is your budget?

- Prices vary depending upon several factors. Making sure that this is taken care of in advance will save your family from unexpected bills.

- Polchinski Memorials, Inc. has been in business for over 100 years and can provide you with valuable guidance and advice when making this important decision.
